

Faculty of Education

TENURE TRACK POSITION IN EDUCATIONAL TECHNOLOGY AND LEARNING DESIGN

The Faculty of Education at Simon Fraser University, seeks applications for a tenure-track position in Educational Technology and Learning Design at the Assistant or Associate Professor rank beginning September 1, 2020.

The successful candidate will join an existing complement of educational technology and learning design scholars to contribute to teaching and graduate student supervision in our vibrant programs. These include a PhD program at our Burnaby campus and a Master's program at our Surrey campus that serves professionals from K-12, postsecondary and industry environments. The successful candidate will also have opportunity to serve in the Faculty's undergraduate and teacher education programs.

Candidates should possess an earned doctorate in Educational Technology, Learning Sciences with a technology and design focus, or a closely related field. To contribute effectively to teaching in our programs, candidates should have a broad mastery of current and historical scholarship in Educational Technology involving theory-informed design and use of technological innovations to support teaching and learning. We encourage applicants with experience in research and teaching in K-12, postsecondary and/or informal learning environments.

The successful applicant will have an active program of empirical research that enhances scholarly theory and informs practical designs for learning and technology. Applicants must have established (if applying for associate) or demonstrate strong promise to develop (if applying for assistant) original, externally-funded program of research, either solo or in collaboration with other faculty in Educational Technology and Learning Design. Successful applicants will have demonstrated knowledge of research methods commonly used in the field.

Located in the Greater Vancouver area, SFU's Faculty of Education is committed to scholarly excellence, leading-edge pedagogy, innovative curriculum, engagement with teachers, and a participatory democratic culture. We offer programs on three campuses in Burnaby, Surrey, and downtown Vancouver and work with learning communities, school districts, institutions of higher education and industry partners throughout British Columbia. The Faculty has an outstanding record in research grants and publications, and in the design and delivery of innovative on-campus, blended, and community-based programs in teacher education, professional development and graduate work. The Faculty of Education embodies the core values of Equity, Indigeneity, and a Culture of Inquiry in its programs, policies, and practices. Candidates are asked to demonstrate their commitment to these values in their own work. For further details please visit:
